A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual (JLM) would first like to thank our readers who sent in artwork to us. Jon Thompson—artistically known as JI(jee)—created the cover page art. Robert Davis created the title page art. We extend our many thanks to Jon and Robert for their support over the years and for graciously allowing us to showcase their artwork.

Putting together a resource like the JLM requires the hard work and dedication of our student staffers, board members, and volunteers. We would like to thank every law student who contributed to this publication, and particularly all of the Articles Editors who spent so much of their time ensuring that we published the most accurate and readable JLM yet. The law students who work on the JLM devote countless hours of uncompensated labor and are the backbone of this critical resource. We are grateful to the students who served as staff editors on the JLM since 2021, all of whom played a role in making this edition of the JLM possible. We extend special thanks to the JLM Editors-in-Chief and Articles Editors, who work tirelessly to ensure the information we provide is accurate.

Distribution of the JLM would not be possible without the JLM Managing Directors. The pandemic's impact on prison and jail policies continues to make distributing the JLM especially challenging. Despite the difficulties, the Managing Directors have made massive improvements to our distribution system that we hope will make it easier for incarcerated people to access our publications going forward.

We also thank the many law professors, legal professionals, and formerly incarcerated advocates who supervise our student workers and provide years of invaluable expertise.

Finally, we profoundly thank every jailhouse lawyer who reads the A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual (JLM). Your dedication to fighting for justice for yourself and those around you is why we do this work. From the bottom of our hearts, we thank you for inspiring us to continue providing this resource.

The Columbia Human Rights Law Review is an academic journal that publishes articles and commentary concerning legal issues of domestic and international human rights. The Human Rights Law Review strives to illuminate subjects of concern to advocates, activists, organizations, courts, scholars, and students of human rights around the world.
